U.S. News and World Report Ranks CU Nursing as Top 15% for Best Online Master's, and Top 15 for Leadership Programs in the U.S.

Aurora, Colo. (January 25, 2022) – A major publisher has ranked the University of Colorado College of Nursing online Master's in nursing and leadership programs as among the best in the nation.

U.S. News & World Report listed the College of Nursing on the Anschutz Medical Campus as 26th best online Master's degree program out of nearly 200 programs in 2022. It also named the College of Nursing's MSN administration and leadership program, called iLEAD, as 13th best out of 61 online programs. CU Nursing also ranked #1 in Colorado for these programs.

“This is a wonderful recognition for our college, faculty and students who work hard every day to ensure patients will get the best health care possible. This just further enhances our reputation as a leader and pioneer in nursing education. We appreciate the U.S. News & World Report for this honor,” said Dean Elias Provencio-Vasquez, PhD.

U.S. News ranks schools according to engagement, faculty credential and training, services and technology, expert opinion, and student excellence. The publication only ranks fully accredited programs in good standing.

CU's Master's degree in nursing program prepares nurses to care for and promote the health of patients with wellness, acute or chronic illness and to manage and evaluate their care with communities and health care systems.

The online Master of Science in Nursing (MSN) leadership program guides nurses into leadership and administrative responsibilities in primary care, long-term care, home health positions and more. The program is called iLEAD for Innovation in Leadership and Administration in Nursing and Health Care Systems. The entire course is taught online by exceptional faculty.
